HERE ARE THE RESULTS...

CitySightseeing Philadelphia

A proof point for gender-responsive lending

Project Udaan challenges long-standing assumptions around women gig workers as "high-risk" borrowers. Instead, it offers a powerful counter-point: When women are enabled with mobility and predictable income, they emerge as disciplined, dependable participants in the formal credit economy. The project highlights opportunity for lenders, policymakers and platforms able to scale women first credit products backed by alternative data, psychometric scoring and ecosystem support. By helping women build repayment history and credit profiles, Project Udaan sets the foundation for:

- Access to lower cost credit in the future
- Eligibility for higher-value assets
- Greater financial resilience and independence

Mobility not only unlocks income but also financial identity and long-term economic agency.

Enabling access to ownership

TWO-WHEELER CAMP & Financing Support

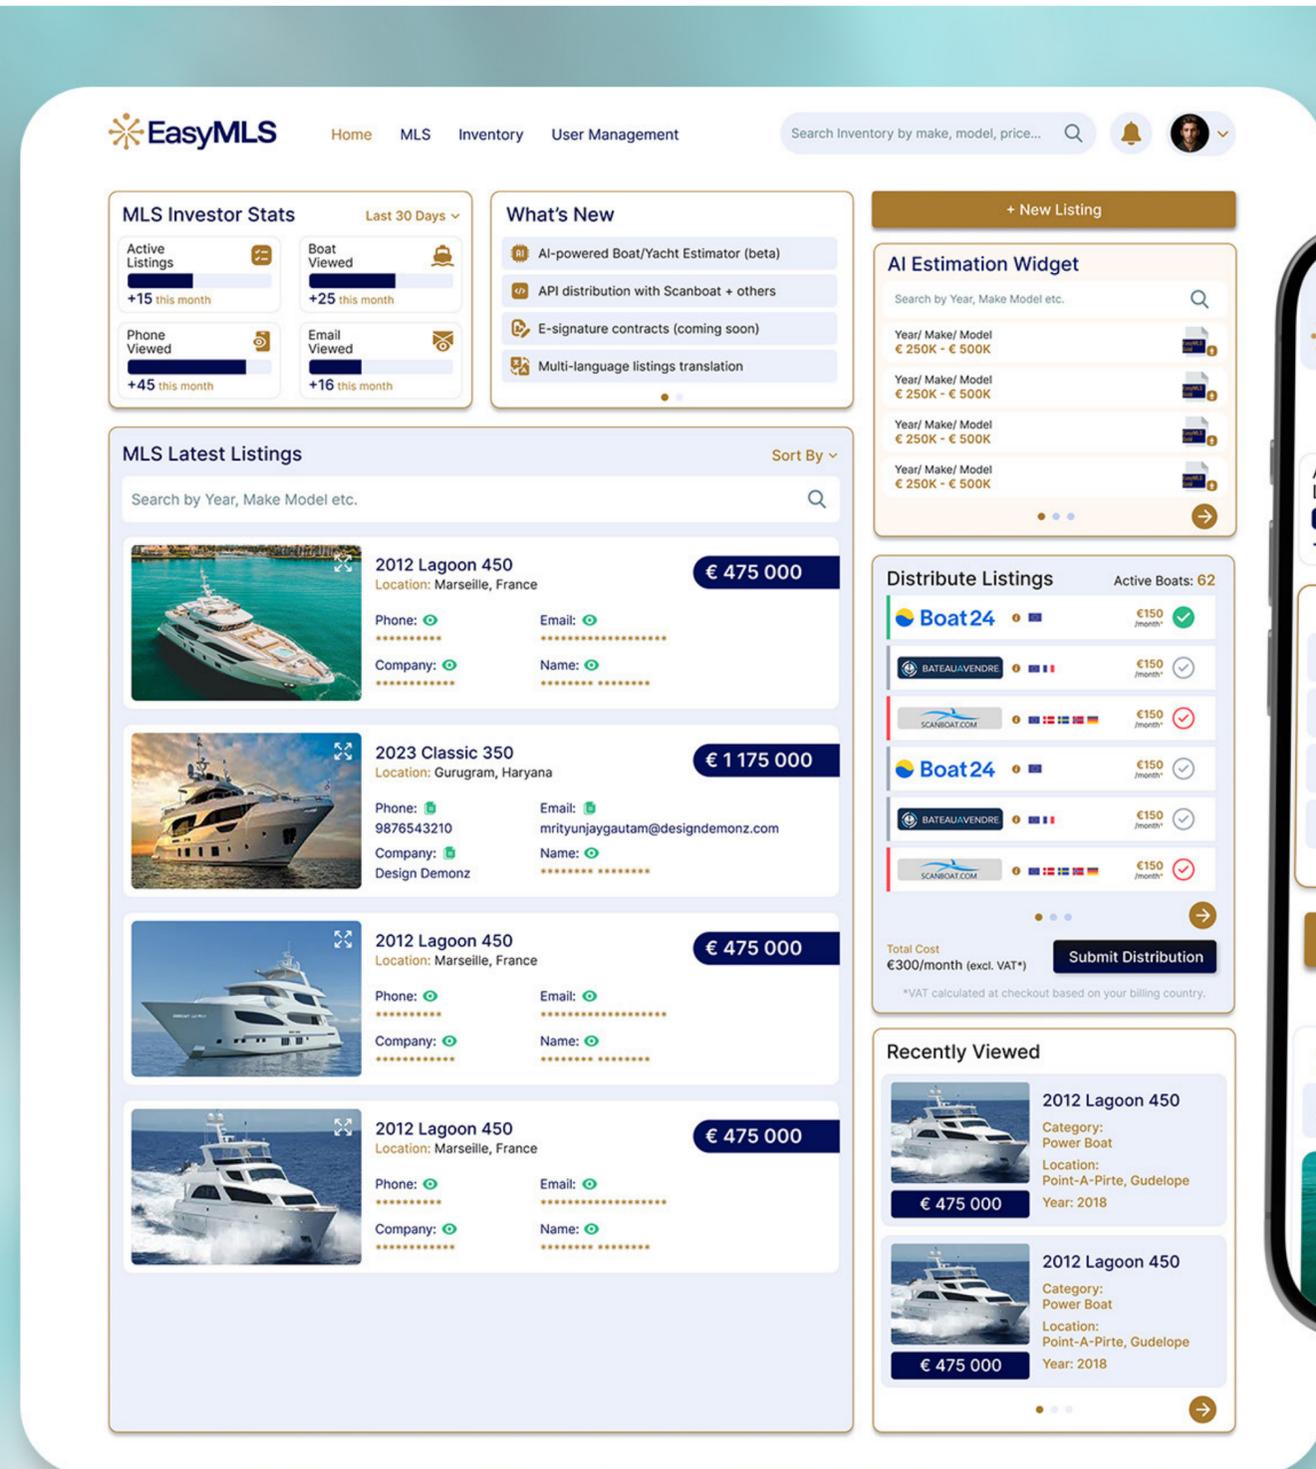

Our field partners team with women service professionals created a striking pattern: Women who wanted to buy a scooter were discouraged not by price alone, but by the dealer's environment itself. In discussions dominated by male sales teams, sales conversations were directed toward accompanying male family members, not the actual women buyers. To resolve this, we set up two-wheeler camps across Delhi, NCR, Mumbai, Hyderabad and Bangalore.

- OEM Partnerships: Discounted rates from TVS, Hero, Honda, on-ground assistance at two-wheeler camps.
- Enabled test rides across models.
- Flexible, faster financing designed for female service professionals via Citic Capital, NCR Bank and GET Finance.
- ₹20,000 down payment support lowering upfront friction for eligible borrowers.

Urban Company's mobility initiative demonstrates how targeted, evidence-based interventions can unlock women's economic participation and productivity at scale. Research showed that when liquidity constraints on early mobility investments are eased, women not only adopt reliable transport at much higher rates but also experience meaningful gains in productivity and access to higher-value work. The success of this experiment underscores a broader lesson: reducing upfront investment barriers in women's independent mobility is an extremely effective lever for improving their labor market outcomes.
